Elliott Linwood

"Constructs"

Statement:

This series of photographs depicts construction workers, engineers and other laborers working in concert at large-scale sites on long-term projects which take a year or more to build. In addition to focusing on individual subjects and their collective actions, these images document the development boom in San Diego expected to double the population of several neighborhoods, while financially displacing some of the longer-term denizens. Informed by the artist's performance and Life Art training, they may be read like a musical score which can be interpreted through various sequence and presentation formats. Undercurrents relate to the fact that Linwood's father was a construction worker, hence the artist's gaze as a gay man suggests an homage in turns both private and public. As an ongoing body of work, it also grapples with memory, the momentary, issues of safety, seasonal labor, interdependence, and social facets of people's lives.

About the Artist:

Elliott Linwood is an interdisciplinary artist whose work examines various types of performance scores, methods of notation and documentation as vehicles for story telling that are infused with critical nuance and curiosity. The index is a recurrent feature of his work. Cross-referencing motifs appear across a wide range of media, from large-scale photo grids to sculptural installations and performances. His work has been exhibited at the Alternative Museum and Artists Space in New York, Randolph Street Gallery in Chicago, the Institute of Contemporary Art in Boston, the de Young Museum, and Yerba Buena Center for the Arts in San Francisco, Highways Exhibition Space in Santa Monica, and the Palm Springs Art Museum.
